ABOUT BUNNIES

A hungry bunny once found the vegetable garden of a rich man who never, never, never ate vegetables. So the hungry bunny ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then he went hop-hippity-hop right home.

The next evening the hungry bunny brought another bunny (then there were two hungry bunnies). They each ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then they went hop-hippity-hop right home.

1907

The next evening the two hungry bunnies brought another bunny (then there were three hungry bunnies). Each one ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then they went hop-hippity-hop right home.

F. Y. COLE

The next evening the three hungry bunnies brought another bunny (then there were four hungry bunnies). They all ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then they went hop-hippity-hop right home.

The next evening the four hungry bunnies brought another bunny (then there were five hungry bunnies). They each ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then they went hop-hippity-hop right home.

The next evening the five hungry bunnies brought another bunny (then there were six hungry bunnies).

Each one ate a cabbage, two heads of lettuce and three carrots. Then they went hop-hippity-hop right home.

The next evening the rich man who never, never, never ate vegetables wondered what happened to his vegetable garden. He never guessed the six hungry bunnies hiding behind the fence ate his cabbages, lettuce and carrots. But we know better, don't we!
