PUNKY DUNK AND THE MOUSE

THIS LITTLE STORY IS TOLD
AND THE LITTLE PICTURES
WERE DRAWN FOR A GOOD
LITTLE CHILD NAMED

Published in the Shop of
R.F. VOLLAND & CO.
CHICAGO

PUNKY DUNK, very sly,
with a wink of his eye Strolled lazily all through the house;
To the cellar he went and the morning he spent
On a hunt for a fat little mouse.

“OVER there by the coal,”
he said, “Mouse has his hole,
So I’ll sit there beside it and wait.
There’s a trap with some cheese
just as nice as you please,
And Mouse soon will come out
for that bait.”

PUNKY sat by the trap,
and seemed taking a nap,
But you know that bold Punky
was wise.

Though he looked half asleep
he was taking a peep
For the gleam of two bright little eyes.

SOON the mouse crept right
out and went running
about;

Punky smiled to himself and he said:

"I will just let him play in his own foolish way
Till I think that I need to be fed."

BUT the Mouse, too, was smart,
and he got a good start,
Then he leaped, and he saved
his wee hide,
For he dashed in a hole that was not near the coal
But was hidden away at one side.

“HA, HA!” Punky said as he shook his white head.
“Well, Mouse, you may run if you please,
But I’ll eat just the same—’twas for that that I came.”
So he reached in the trap for the cheese.

SNIP-SNAP! went the trap—
Wasn't that a mishap!
Punky's black little paw was inside.

He leaped and he jumped and he ran and he bumped—
And the Mouse sat and laughed till he cried.

PUNKY ran up the stairs
and he knocked over chairs
And he sprang to the table and dropped,
He "Meowed!" in his fright, for
the trap held him tight,
And it was a long time till he stopped

BABY'S mama then came and she said: "What a shame!"
And she took off the trap from his paw,
And she wrapped it in silk and she fed him with milk
And she gave him some fish bones
to gnaw.

PUNKY now roams the house
but he looks at that mouse
In a manner as kind as you please,
For he thinks of the trap with its terrible snap
And he's lost all his taste for some cheese.

The End.
